COLORADO.

Colorado Presidential Choice.

LEADVILLE, Jan. 30.—The Democrat of tomorrow will contain letters and interviews with all the leading democrats and republicans of Colorado, including the congressional delegation, on the presidential question. The republican sentiment is divided in a ratio of about 31 for Blaine, 23 for Grant, 15 for Sherman, 1 for Hayes, 2 for Washburne, and 1 for Hartranft. The majority of the Grant men favor Blaine as the second choice. The democratic opinion is almost equally divided between Tilden and Bayard, with Field, of California, next, and Seymour, Hendricks, Pendleton and Hancock about even. The republican opinion is that the Colorado delegation will be about evenly divided between Grant and Blaine.

To-morrow's Daily Herald, of this city, will contain a report of interviews with 1,949 representative republicans of Colorado on their first choice for the presidential nominee of the Chicago convention. The result is, Blaine, 1,026; Grant, 866; Sherman, 34; Conkling, 3; Washburne, 7; Garfield, 2.

GENERAL NEWS.

Washington News.

GOV. PITKIN'S TESTIMONY.

WASHINGTON, January 30. Governor Pitkin of Colorado, to day resumed his testimony before the house committee on Indian affairs. He related the incidents of his interviews with Jack and other Indians going to show that Ouray had gradually lost his influence over the young Utes, and that the disaffection and war spirit had for some time been gaining the ascendency with them. He said some of the scouts had previous to Thornburg's fight been warned the Indians would attack the troops at or near Bear river and that the general opinion among the people of Colorado was that the outbreak was premeditated.

SECRETARY SHERMAN ON APPROPRIATION.

The following letter of the secretary of the treasury in regard to the repeal of certain permanent and indefinite appropriations, has been addressed to Hon. H. G. Davis, chairman of the senate committee on appropriations:

SIR:—Referring to senate bill number 886 for repealing of the law relative to the permanent and indefinite appropriations recently submitted for the expression of my views regarding its provisions and for a statement of appropriations which will be affected thereby, I have the honor to state that while the system of annual appropriation which gives to congress the proper supervision of all appropriations and expenditures is undoubtedly correct, its general adoption should not be enforced without allowing sufficient time for the proper consideration of estimate of the amount required to replace the appropriations to be repealed especially as estimates for the various departments for the next year have been already submitted to congress and in many cases reported upon by the committee having them in charge. In view also of the inconvenience, if not embarrassment, that would for a time attend this change of system, I would respectfully recommend that the date of repeal be changed to take effect from and after June 30th, 1881, which it is believed is as early a date as it would be wise to adopt for the repeal of so large a class of appropriations.

The following form of bill which provides for the disposition of such balances as may remain to the credit of the appropriation at the expiration of the period of limitation, it is believed covers more fully all the points at issue than the one already introduced and it is respectfully suggested that it be submitted, viz:

A bill to repeal certain laws relating to the permanent and indefinite appropriations.

Be it enacted, etc, that all laws heretofore made for the appropriation of moneys from the general treasury for the permanent, specific and indefinite objects except so far as they provide appropriation for sinking fund for the payment of the interest, premium or principal of the public debt, or of bonds issued to the Pacific railway company, for the expenses pertaining to refunding of the national debt, not exceeding one half of one per centum of the bonds authorized by the acts of July 14, 1870, January 20, 1871, and January 14, 1875, be, and the same are hereby repealed, to take effect from and after June 30, 1881, provided that nothing in this act shall be construed to interfere with the present requirements of the law in relation to the payment of annuities to Indians, or of any moneys received and held in nature of a trust for a specific purpose or for excess of duties or taxes paid into the treasury; and provided further, that the expenditures which may be properly incurred within one year prior to June 30, 1881, under any of the appropriations affected by this act, may be made any time within one year after that date, at the expiration of which time any balance remaining unexpended of such appropriation shall be credited to the surplus fund.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted that all appropriations hereafter to be made shall remain available for two years for the payment of expenditures properly incurred within the time for which they are appropriated, except the appropriations for the construction of public buildings, rivers and harbors, light houses and forts, which shall remain available for like purposes for a period of four years, at the expiration of which period all appropriations or balances of appropriations which shall have been upon the books of the treasury for said period of two and four years respectively shall be carried to the surplus fund, and with the exception of the appropriation for the public debt, the limitation herein placed upon expenditure shall apply to all appropriations now upon the books of the treasury.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted that it shall be the duty of the heads of the several departments of the government to include in their annual estimate to congress, estimate of the amount required for expenditure under the appropriation effected by this act for the service for the fiscal year of 1882.

Sec. 4. Be it further enacted that all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with the provision of this act be and the same are hereby repealed.

Accompanying the letter is a long schedule of appropriations which will be affected by the proposed bill, as well as those excepted from its operations.

NOMINATIONS FOR CENSUS SUPERVISORS.

The senate committee on census met to day and received reports from the several sub committees on nominations of census supervisors. The appointments were reported back favorably from the sub committee for all western states except three for Illinois, one for Iowa, and one for Tennessee, which are held by the sub committees for further inquiry. It was agreed by common consent that all the nominations reported from the sub committees to day in regard to none of which there is any question of personal fitness of the nominee shall be immediately reported back to the senate with the recommendation for confirmation, but at the same time several democratic members of the committee took the ground that one half of the census supervisors throughout the whole country ought to be selected from the democratic party and they therefore reserved the right to disregard to day's action of the committee when the nominations come up for consideration in the senate. The indications are that a strong movement will be made in the senate to put off the consideration of all the census nominations for the present with a view to forcing on an equal division of these appointments between the two great political parties.

THE HAYT REMOVAL.

CHICAGO, January 30. The News' Washington special in regard to the peremptory dismissal of Commissioner Hayt, that Secretary Schurz states that it was not based upon any statement or confession made by General Hammond but upon information obtained by him in an altogether different manner. The position he says as yet has been offered to no one, not yet having determined upon the successor. Your correspondent called upon General Hammond at his hotel. His physicians refused to allow any one to see him, but Gen. Hammond in response to my note sent down the following: "Did not see Mr. Schurz at the Riggs House, or at any other place yesterday or to-day, and no such interview as reported in the morning paper has taken place and consequently the statements therein are physically impossible.

RULES GOVERNING PENSIONS.

The house committee, on invalid pensions, on motion of Mr. Caldwell, unanimously agreed to day on the following resolution to govern the consideration by the committee of invalid pensions:

Resolved, That all pension claims of an invalid character shall be reported to date from the discharge where the disability was incurred subsequent to the discharge from the date of disability, and all gratuity pensions state the date from the passage of the act, all widows' pensions where the husband had been pensioned shall date from the death of the husband, and where the husband had not been pensioned, from the date of disability.

SECRETARY SHERMAN BEFORE THE SENATE FINANCE COMMITTEE.

Secretary Sherman was before the senate finance committee to-day in response to their invitation for an oral expression of his views on the funding question and other points. The secretary's remarks, aside from repeating his well known views in regard to the funding, were for the most part simply an explanation of his last annual report, of the accompanying finance exhibits for the year 1879. The conference is not concluded to-day and the secretary will appear before the committee next week.

GOOD NEWS FOR COLORADO.

The secretary of the treasury has increased the bullion fund of the Denver mint one hundred and twenty thousand dollars and authorized the purchase of silver by the assayer in charge in lots of less than ten thousand ounces.

RENO'S SENTENCE.

Although no official confirmation can be obtained as yet of the story that the court which has been investigating the charges against Major Reno have recommended his dismissal, the accuracy of this report is generally conceded. It is further stated, unofficially, however, that General Sherman favors a milder course and will recommend that Major Reno be suspended for one year.

SHERMAN-BOYNTON QUARREL.

Gen. H. V. Boynton's charge against Gen. W. T. Sherman are made public. General Boynton submitted the specifications which are three in number to the secretary of war, Ramsey, for the information of the president. He shows the legal right to make such charges is established by the recognized opinions of the judge advocate general. He then proceeds to state that on the twelfth instant a reporter for a newspaper approached General W. T. Sherman at the headquarters of the army and asked his opinion of the report of the undersigned explaining to General Sherman that he and some other others with him had published the undersigned as a liar and that General Sherman's testimony was also desired to add to their own on that point to show the public what a fraud he the undersigned is. In the course of the conversation which followed in which the reporter acted in his capacity as such, General Sherman said to him, with the full understanding that what he said was solicited for publication, among other false and slanderous things of the undersigned, that he is entirely without character. You could hire him to do anything for money. For a few thousand dollars he would stone his own mother and that he was very persistent and energetic in manufacturing falsehoods. These things being spoken to a reporter for publication and being uttered in the presence and hearing of others constitute the crime of slander as defined by the laws in force in the district of Columbia. This constitutes the first specification.

The second specification is in effect that four days later, General Boynton, feeling confident that however severely General Sherman might criticise the review of his memoirs by the undersigned of which he was more particularly speaking to the reporter, he would not so far forget what belonged to his high office as to use language at once so coarse, so false, and so unofficerlike. Therefore he called the attention of General Sherman in writing to the reporter's article, and asked if the words attributed to him were correctly stated. General Sherman replied endorsing them in language in some respects still more gross than that to which his attention had been called. This letter he subsequently exhibited to others, by which exhibition he again violated the laws relating to the crime of slander.

Specification third sets forth that Sherman in his memoirs purporting to give an accurate account of himself during the civil war and having all the records within easy reach committed grave and inexcusable errors in statement and did by these writings do great injustice to the officers serving with or under him, to General U. S. Grant in connection with the forts Henry and Donelson campaign, and the march to the sea, to General D. C. Buell and the army of the Ohio in connection with the battle of Pittsburgh Landing, to General G. H. Thomas in connection with the battles of Chattanooga and Nashville and the assault on Kenesow Mountain, to General J. B. McPherson, then deceased, in connection with the battle of Resaca, to General John A. Logan and Francis P. Blair the latter then dying with paralysis, in connection with the battle of Atlanta, to General Morgan, Secretary Smith and Hon. E. M. Stanton in connection with the Savannah cotton matter. These asperations against noted officers and these various errors, unjust assertions and unfounded calumnies, having been partially exposed by Henry V. Boynton, a writer of honorable character and fair reputation, by comparing the writing of said W. T. Sherman, general of the army with the official records of the war and published the same in a volume showing that the march to the sea, for which General Sherman took the full credit, really was planned by Gen. Grant and that other campaigns, of which Sherman claimed to be the originator, were the work of other generals.

Gen. Boynton says he has concuded to afford General Sherman an oppertunity of asking for a court which, if called, must of necessity be made up of officers high in rank and possessing the respect and confidence of the public. It would also be a court wherein the general of the army would have every advantage which high rank and extended fame could give. It is respectfully submitted that while the officers may not violate the letter of the articles of war by writing inaccurately and to the discredit of distinguished fellow officers, such conduct does most grossly violate the spirit. And it is further respectfully submitted that an officer holding the position of general of the army with all the records of the war in his control by which to insure justice and accuracy can't well commit a greater offense against the military morale than to publish inaccurate and unjust statements to the injury of noted officers—both living and dead—whose reputations, deeds and fame are as dear to the country as his own.

Washburne's Position.

NEW YORK, January 30 The Tribune says Hon. E. B. Washburne, now here en route for Boston, denies he is a candidate for governor of Illinois, and also that he stands in any other relation to the presidential canvass than that of a supporter of Grant.

Reid Engaged.

Ireland's Distress.

NEW YORK, January 30.—Richard O. Gorman, secretary of the Irish relief committee of New York, recieved a cable dispatch from Ed. Dwyer Gray, mayor of Dublin and chairman of the Mansion House relief committee, Dublin, stating the distress in the west of Ireland is rapidly increasing and assuming calamitous proportions. Gorman said this evening he was daily in receipt of information from Ireland, all to the effect that the distress in the northwest and southwest and the islands lying off these parts was rapidly developing dimensions far exceeding the worst fears of the people of the bonic district. The distress had almost taken the character of a famine and the gravest fears are anticipated for the spring and early summer. He will to morrow send £200 to the Mansion House committee which will make £2,100 already sent by this committee. The Irish relief committee of this city issued an address to the people of the United States urgently requesting a speedy contribution for distressed Ireland. After reciting the condition of the people in many districts, the address says the Dublin Mansion House committee will fulfill all the conditions required for the wise and humane disposal of any funds placed in their hands. Subscriptions to the Irish relief fund will be received by th treasurer, Henry L. Hagnet, at the Emigrant Industrial savings bank, St. Chambers street.

Business Prospect in New England.

BOSTON, January 30. The commercial buyers are on the alert, and spring trade will soon be in full operation. All leading raw staples are on a strong basis. Several large movements have been made during the week in anticipation of higher prices. Manufactured goods have never had a more promising outlook, and the hum of industry which is heard all through the manufacturing districts is a sure indication that the coast is clear for a long and successful run.

The Barrels Going.

NEW YORK, January 30. The long standing suit of the St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute railway company against Samuel T. Tilden, Chas. Butler, and others has ended at last by a virtual confession of judgment by the defendants and repayment of several hundred thousand dollars.

Maine News.

New York Stock Market.

NEW YORK, January 30. Stocks were unsettled, but no wide range. The question has been raised by some buyers of the Central Pacific stock which was sold yesterday, whether the stock carries 3 per cent. February dividend or not. The question has been referred to the proper committee of the stock exchange.

FOREIGN.

French Politics.

LONDON, January 30. A dispatch from Paris says the coalition of moderate republicans with the conservatives yesterday elected Leon Say to the presidency of the senate finance committee over Colman, vice president of the senate, the regular republican candidate.

The senate proceeded to elect a life senator in the place of Viscount Comille Baccahasson DeMontalivet, recently deceased, the extreme left, whose turn it was to make the nomination, selected Dr. Paul Barce, a prominent authorpologist. Duffuare, a republican life senator, and fourteen followers have practically ceased to belong to the left center and must henceforth rank as a distinct group midway between the left and right centers. They declined to be bound by the relation system of the left and opposed the nomination of Dr. Barce on the grounds of his Darwinian tendencies. They nominated Bertland, a well known advocate and republican, but opposed to the Jesuit clause of Jules Ferry's education bill. A vote being taken Dr. Barce received 126 votes and Bertland 118, scattering 12. Dr Barce thus received three less than an absolute majority. The election was then postponed. More than one hundred senators of the right center supported the nomination of Bertland.

Bismarck and the Church.

LONDON, January 30.—A Berlin dispatch to be taken in connection with the statement that when the budget of the ministry of public worship comes up for discussion next week in the Prussian diet, Bismarck will take an opportunity to give an explanation of the church question. He says neither the Ultramontane party, nor the centre, nor the Prussian bishops can be regarded as impartial sources of information touching the plans of the vatican. Bismarck has determined to demand directly from the pope what really are the grievances which the church wish to correct.

Explosion in a Mine.

LONDON, January 30.—By a fire damp explosion in a colliery at Meissen, Saxony, yesterday, ten miners were killed and nine injured. Nineteen persons were in the pit at the time. The explosion is unaccounted for.

Strength of the German Army.

BERLIN, January 30. The strength of the German army on a peace footing as shown by the military budget of 1880 is 17,727 officers and 401 639 men. This does not include the projected increase which the Cologne Gazette says is chiefly destined to reinforce the Alsace Lorraine garrison.

Buried Alive.

OTTAWA, January 30. A grave digger had thrown three or four shovelfuls on a coffin of a small pox victim, when he fancied he heard a noise in the coffin. He raised it and found the person still living. He was taken back to the hospital.

Parnell Snubbed.

MONTREAL, January 30.—Parnell's visit to this city is postponed but asserted by many papers that this is owing to the strong feeling here of the public against his visit. He will not come at all.

Good News for Poland.

VIENNA, January 30. It is reported the Czarowitch recently remarked to some Polish magistrates, he shall be proud to wear your glorious crown. Communicate this to your countrymen and assure them of the favor of their future king.

Abolition Bill Finally Passes.

MADRID, January 30. The senate by a vote of 150 to 28 approved the articles of the Cuban slavery abolition bill modified by the mixed committee of senate and deputies.

FOREIGN NOTES.

Three deaths from starvation occurred this week near Parsontown county, South Ireland.

Intelligence has been received at Paris that Abbe De Buize, in attempting to cross Africa died at Ujuji.

The pope's health is causing anxiety. He suffers from fits of shivering and great prostration, but persists in his usual occupations.

At the German Government cannon foundry such large orders are received that a number of fresh hands have been engaged, all working extra time.

The increase of the infecting disease in St. Petersburg is exciting some apprehension. The mortality from that cause for the week ending January 17th bring 19 per cent of the whole mortality, or twice as great as usual.

In the case of Adjutant Baronoff, sentenced by courtmartial to be dismissed from the Russian naval service for insulting language in reference to the minister of marine, the czar has ordered that he be placed on half pay instead of being dismissed. It is probable he will receive the command of one of the Russian cruisers in the Pacific.

The Democrat says Leadville will contest Judge Belford's re-nomination.

Senator Logan is for Grant. He thinks him the most available candidate for the presidency.

The extracts from the Register-Call about scalps reminds us of the great speech of Lord Chatham on the British conduct of the war in America.

The brave whites in Pueblo who wanted to attack the unarmed Indians, have an opportunity to show their bravery by attending General Adam on his mission.

The editor of the Register-Call should have offered himself as a volunteer to General Adams to bring in the twelve, dead or alive. He wants scalps badly.

The Leadville Herald makes a great mistake in endorsing Beck's speech against the Bayard resolution. It is a simple rehash of the greenback arguments on the currency question.

The Denver Times has intimated that the next republican convention may decide whether it will continue to approve of the single term policy for governor established by the last convention.

The Leadville Democrat sums up the presidential situation as follows: "Mr. Blaine has the lead in the go-as-you-please presidential walking match. Sherman is making a good second, while Grant has drawn off to Cuba for repairs."

It is to be presumed that the republicans in this state desire the success of the republican candidate in 1880. They should therefore put aside all personal prejudices and support any man who is a good republican that has the best chance of success.

The Chaffee "boom" is based wholly on cash. Denver News.

This is a direct slur on the Register-Call. No one who knows Colonel Dolliver will think that he had other than patriotic motives in nominating Chaffee for the vice-presidency.

There is one good thing about the German vote. It is not, like the Irish vote, always cast with one party. It is the most independent element in our politics, and for this reason will be the most controling. Its vote is generally cast with that party that is for honest money and purity of administration.

The efforts of General Adams and Jack to capture the twelve may be successful. The end to be attained is desirable. Why should the papers which really desire the punishment of the Utes oppose the mission? The only inference to be drawn from this opposition is that the papers are not sincere in their advocacy.

The removal of Commissioner Hayt seems to be based on the fact that he suppressed information that should have been given to the department. This was a sufficient cause. For a similar reason the chief clerk of the Indian department was removed two years ago. Secretary Schurz is demonstrating to even the most skeptical that his administration of the interior department is vigorous and thorough.

The Leadville Democrat has a neat way of putting things. This is the way it describes the famous shot-gun campaign in Mississippi in 1875, and its famous leader, General George, recently elected senator to succeed Bruce: "General George achieved his greatest reputation in 1875, when he was chairman of the democratic state central committee. The party was discouraged by repeated reverses and the fact that the wealth and influence of the national administration was brought to the aid of their opponents in every struggle. The negro vote was hard to convert, but George undertook the task, and by hard and conscientious labor succeeded in achieving the first democratic victory that Mississippi had known for years."

He said the Utes had never been accustomed to remain on their reservation, but had wandered wherever they pleased. In fact their reservation was simply a place from which white men were excluded. The interior department had tried to make them remain on their reservation, but they could not deter them from their roaming habits. Washington Cor. of the Denver News.

We don't know whether the above on the testimony of Governor Pitkin expresses the ignorance of the correspondent or of the governor. By both the treaties of 1868 and 1874, the right of the Indians to hunt, fish and roam over all the territory ceded in these treaties including our great parks and San Juan, except on land sold by the government to private parties, is expressly reserved. It may be bad policy, but still it is a treaty stipulation. The Indians simply gave the government the land to open for settlers provided the government gave the Indians the right to use it until it was settled. As for the right of white men to go on the reservation, it is expressly prohibited by the treaties.

Judge Hallett's Visit to Washington.

It is gravely suggested that the object of Judge Hallett's visit to Washington has some connection with the Rio Grande mandamus case now before the supreme court. The natural route from Colorado to Florida is not via Washington, and the fact that the decision of the court which, in the ordinary course of events was due last Monday, was not rendered, gives additional weight to the supposition that he has gone there, or been called there, for consultation on the subject of the Grand Canon suits. Denver Times.

More than fifty citizens have urged the News to comment severely on Judge Hallett's visit to Washington under the pretense of going to Florida. They think he has gone on to lobby with the members of the supreme court for the Santa Fe in the present mandamus case. The judges will meet at their houses, and, being overworked with their many important cases, will naturally ask him about this one, and he will effectively get in his work. Denver News.

We regret very much that the indiscreet conduct of Judge Hallett should have called forth such paragraphs as the above. There is nothing more disastrous to a community than want of confidence in the integrity and fairness of the judiciary. The article in the Times means a great deal, as its editor is very conservative and never deals in unwarranted attacks upon public men. This is by no means the first indiscreet act of Judge Hallett in connection with this railroad fight. The difficulty the Denver & Rio Grande Co. had in getting into his court in May, 1878, and the facility with which he brushed aside all technicalities to allow the A. T. & S. F. to get into his court in June, 1879, are matters of history and are frequently commented on by lawyers, as inexplicable in any way to Judge Hallett's credit. The regularity with which he granted the requests of the Atchison counsel for delay, and the equal regularity with which he refused similar requests of the Rio Grande counsel are matters of record. When the Rio Grande company were ordered to turn over the road to the Atchison Topeka & Santa Fe company three days were allowed. When the Atchison company were ordered to turn the road over to Receiver Ellsworth, the Rio Grande counsel suggested ten days be given, the Atchison counsel asked for fifteen, and Judge Hallett granted twenty two days. A distinguished New York jurist who was in this city at the time, and followed the case, said that such a length of time was unprecedented, and that the judge's action was remarkable. It is also rather a notorious fact that Judge Hallett granted a longer postponement to the Grand Canon case in October than the Atchison counsel asked for, and directly in conflict with the interests of the people of this state, as well as against the protests of the Rio Grande counsel. The striking and unexplained inconsistency with his decision of last December and that in last July, when Judge Hallett saw fit to give conflicting opinions in regard to whether a prior right of way through the Grand Canon is a prior right of way to Leadville is also well remembered.

For months it has become evident to a large number of people in this state that Judge Hallett seems to be unable to give unprejudiced opinions in the railroad cases. Far be it from us to impute any bad motives to Judge Hallett. We only regret that such apparently partisan acts on his part have created such distrust in his fairness as a judge.

Nasby on Blaine.

When Blaine passed through Boston on his way to Washington, the Massachusetts club gave him a dinner. Among the speakers was the Rev. Petroleum V. Nasby, who was introduced as a bourbon democrat, unconverted and un-reconstructed. He spoke as follows:

Mr. Chairman: I never made a speech in my life, and I don't know any place under heaven where I should attempt it. I shan't attempt it this afternoon because there is nothing in me original, unless it be original sin [laughter], and I have not been well enough for a week to hold a very large amount of that. [Laughter.] But in spite of my ill health and very busy life I am engaged just now in the distressed work of elevating the drama [laughter] I could not resist the temptation, or rather I could not deny myself the pleasure of coming here to-day to assist in honoring one whom I consider well, anyway the second greatest man in [loud laughter] in America, and I include both north and south. [Laughter.] Our guest or rather the guest of the club, for I am a guest here myself, does not by any manner of means belong in Maine. I remember in the last presidential campaign, when we actually elected President Hayes not as our democratic brethren vainly say counted in, next to the Toledo Blade, I think we owe the state of Ohio to our friend of Maine. [Applause and laughter.] I remember one October afternoon, no, it was September, when he spoke to such a concourse of people as I never saw gathered since 1863, on the fair grounds adjoining the city of Toledo, where I reside sometimes, and he held that vast mass of people, I would not pretend to say how many acres of them there were, for three hours and a half, and there was not a dull minute in all that time. No one went away; they all stayed and listened. It came evening. I wish to say right here that there were delegations from Saginaw, two hundred miles distant. I don't mean to say small delegations, there were train loads, great train loads. At night there was a furious tempest. I don't know as I ever saw a more disagreeable rain, and if there is a state in the Union that caught up disagreeable rains it is the state of Ohio; and if there is any one section of that state which can excel any other portion in this regard, it is the northwestern portion of it. This Saginaw delegation insisted on another speech, and our senator stood on the steps of the postoffice, scorning even the simple covering of an umbrella, in his bare head, and spoke two hours and a half more. I spoke to one old lumberman from up in the pine regions, who had marched all day, and said: "Are'nt you a little too old, I saw you listening all this afternoon, aren't you a little too old to stand here in this rain carrying a torch?" Said he, using the Michigan vernacular, "Hell, I could stay here all night." [Loud laughter] The senator spoke all over the state, I don't know how many speeches he made, he could not have made too many; so next to the Toledo Blade and an overruling providence, we owe to him that we carried the state by a majority. I don't know how many thousands, but which was entirely suffident. Gentlemen; I can't make a speech, but I should be ashamed of myself if I could not go anywhere to assist in honoring a man who snatched victory from defeat, and who saved the great state of Maine from a lasting disgrace. [Loud applause.]

BYRON AND SHELLEY.

A Talk with E. J. Trelawny—Some new Anecdotes of the Poets—The Cremation of Shelley.

To see Mr. Trelawny and hear him talk is to be transported back, as if by magic, half a century or so, to the thrilling period when Shelley and Byron, those revolutionary Dioscuri of English poetry, passed the last years of their brief lives self-exiled in Italy. As he sits smoking in his chair, or paces up and down the room, the grand old man, who has been so long before Europe as to have become historical, still shows traces in the fine features which justify the assertion that he, Lord Byron, and Count d'Orsay were considered the three handsomest men of their time. Then, as he begins talking to you in a voice that seems issuing from some deep cavern, his prodigious memory and singular power of expression make the past present.

Shelley seems to be the only mortal who ever touched that proud, rebel spirit with a feeling akin to hero worship. When he speaks of the poet there is something like tenderness in his accents, something verging on the reverence in his looks. The customary formulas of social intercourse are an abomination in his sight. Woe to you, if, on first seeing him, you should unfortunately say, "How do you do, Mr. Trelawny?" He will, if not rebuke, merely grunt out a reply and look as if he thought you a fool. He gives no small change of conversation; every word he utters is stamped with his personality a personality so powerful that it overtops everything he can say or do.

He will begin speaking quite abruptly as if only continuing aloud some previous train of thought. "What," he growled, "is all that rubbish that Symonds writes writes about Shelley being too beautiful to paint? Too beautiful to paint, indeed! When he was quite young he might have had the beauty that we admire in children or young girls, but he had no manly beauty. He was narrow-chested and he stooped like a scholar. You could see that from a child, almost a baby, he had been bending over books. He had the smallest head of any man I ever knew; Byron's came next. His eyes were slightly prominent and there was hardly any of the white visible. To see him in a crowd was like seeing a stag in the midst of a herd of deer. The deer has a timid way of looking on the ground, but the stag walks with lifted head and shining eyes. His were like stars. Now Byron was handsome. The upper part of his figure was nobly proportioned and his throat was like a column. He had most beautiful eyes, well set in his head; they were like a cat's, changing continually in color, now brown, now golden, then green, full of ever-varying expression.

"What do you think of their genius respectively?"

"Shelley had the divine madness which alone makes a man write great poetry. But he appealed to the intellect, while Byron's poetry appealed to the passions of mankind. All men have passions, therefore they understood him. But Shelley was a great metaphysician, a logician, a poet whom people shunned in his day. No one read his writings, and when I went to get one of his poems from Ollier, his publisher, he pretended not to have a copy, till being informed that I was Shelley's friend, he fetched it from a secret drawer. This was the universal feeling concerning him. No one understood him not Hogg, not Peacock, and the former, though he often calls him a divine poet, did not believe anything of the kind; on the contrary, he thought it all nonsense, and was laughing in his sleeve when he used such expressions."

"But what was the bond between them, then?"

"Why, they were both excellent scholars. Shelley was an enthusiastic student of the Greek poets, and greatly influenced by them, especially in his latter years. No one who is ignorant of the classics can thoroughly appreciate him. That is partly the reason why Swineburne understands him so well; he has written better things concerning him than any one else. But he, too, has some of the divine madness. Nothing great can ever be done without it. Here is another man who was also full of it."

"Was Shelley's voice really as loud and piercing as is generally asserted?"

Mr. Trelawny was pacing up and down the room while uttering these sentences in his deep, leonine voice. He now brought me a portrait of John Brown, the American martyr, of whom he spoke with a kindling eye.

"Do you know what was his answer to the rebels when they threatened to hang him? 'Do' said he. 'I wish for nothing better, for then my name will become a flag for the north to rally round.' Enthusiasts and fanatics are the men that move the world. There is Blake, now; I consider him a true poet, also; what he writes is full of inspiration."

He repeated some of Blake's lines. His manner of quoting poetry is peculiarly impressive, almost oracular; it seems that Shelley was very fond of it. Once hearing him declaim:

> Time hath, my lord, a wallet at his back,
> In which he puts alms for oblivion,

the poet was so taken with the passage, which he did not appear to know, that he clapped his hands with delight, and could not hear it often enough. Something being said to him about his "Rosalind and Helen," he laughed and shouted, "That's going into Time's wallet, you know."

"Of course all the Shelley biographers must go on repeating Hogg's assertion about the harsh shrillness of the poet's tones. No doubt he was habitually hoarse in this climate. You always find that Italians lose their voice on coming to England, while that of the English gets sweeter in Italy. Shelley's voice was soft and pleasant—at any rate when I knew him."

"Did Shelley ever shut himself up to write?"

"Shut himself up!" shouted Mr. Trelawny indignantly. 'Never! He wrote his poems in the open air; on the sea shore; in the pine woods; and like a shepherd, he could tell the time of day exactly by the light. He never had a watch. And I think Byron never had; but, if the latter had one he never wore it."

"Which of all Byron's works do you yourself prefer?"

"'Childe Harold.' He at one time intended introducing me, either into that poem or into Don Juan;' he did not know which. His intention was to have written a fifth canto of 'Childe Harold,' the scene of which was to have been laid at Naples. But he said he must see Naples before writing about it; he could not write about things he had not seen.

"Southey on his return from a tour in Italy was asked by a friend whether he considered Shelley or Byron as the head of the Satanic school. Southey, pointing to his feet, said, 'The devil marks his own.' Mr. Trelawny chuckled sardonically, and he repeated the joke at intervals, as if he enjoyed it.

That accounts, I suppose, for the author of 'The Vision of Judgment' imposing poor Southey in the pillory of his imperishable satire?"

"Yes. Moore, who used to sugar over his spite and malice with the diamonds dust of wit, lost no time in repeating the saying to his noble friend."

Mr. Trelawny informed me that Gerome, the French artist, had begun a picture of the burning of Shelley's body. The idea evidently gratified him. He referred to it repeatedly, picturing the scene, which apparently increased in vividness while he described it, till I, too, seemed to see with him the long sweep of sand, the smoothly rippling waters of the bay, the long, dark line of the pine forest skirting the shore.

"Gerome," he said, "ought to introduce the pines in his picture. They are characteristic of Shelley and of the place. Their tall, straight stems, forty feet high, rose at equal distances one from the other, and although the sun never penetrated through their interlacing boughs, it would cast a red light on the trunks below.

"I wish M. Gerome could hear your description; some one ought certainly to send these details to him."

"I will send a letter to Rossetti; he can communicate with the artist if he thinks proper. Byron and myself were the only persons on the spot besides three coast-guards. Leigh Hunt remained in his carriage on the edge of the pine forest. Italian peasant-folk had also come to witness the spectacle, but, with hereditary good breeding, died not press near, and remained patiently watching in their gigs, carts and other vehicles. As I was pouring the incense, wine and oil upon the flames, I muttered, half to myself, 'I restore to nature, through fire, the elements of which this man was composed—earth, air and water; everything is changed but not annihilated. He is now a portion of that which he worshipped.' I continued for some time in this vein, when I suddenly felt Byron clapping me on the shoulder. 'Why, Trelawny,' he said, 'I knew you were a pagan, but not that you were a pagan priest. You do it very well.'

From the obsequies of Shelley it was but natural to revert to the death-scene of Lord Byron. He had a curious fancy in his last illness to count the number of boots in the room; he persisted in saying that he could only count three boots. This, Mr. Trelawny remarked, "was a sign of the extraordinary activity of Byron's intellect. For he had read in some German author not long before, that incipient madness showed itself by an incapacity of counting correctly; and now in his delirium this statement was evidently preying on his mind, and he was trying experiments on himself."

"If Lord Byron had lived, what in your opinion would have been the end of his Greek expedition?"

"Why, he might have been president, or King of Greece. Odysseus, the only capable man the Greeks had, and myself would have managed it."

"What a possibility! But it would have been too like poetic justice for this world of fact, if he who so gloriously sang of 'The Isles of Greece' had also succeeded to their sway."

"'Childe Harold' represents Byron as he was at heart; 'Don Juan' as he liked to appear in a circle, to the world."

Mr. Trelawny did not tell me all this consecutively. He comes and goes, and walks out of the house even before you are aware of his intentions. The last time I saw him was at his place at Sompting, on the South Downs. His own particular sitting room there reminds one considerably of a ship's cabin; it is very plainly furnished, without curtains, and the wall paper, brilliantly colored like a child's picture book, has small square designs of different nations engaged in characteristic occupations. In the morning I heard this wonderful old man, now aged eighty-seven, singing as he rose. He always takes a kind of air bath before dressing, draws his own water and chops his own wood. He breakfasts off cold water, bread and fruit, which he eats standing, on the principle that after lying in bed people should not sit down again. The crumbs of his table he scatters on the window sill for the birds, being very fond of animals generally. He is extremely abstemious, taking only one solid meal a day, and, like his beloved Shelley, he prefers a diet consisting of vegetable, milk and fruit, to meat. His astonishing health and strength ought certainly to make many converts to his mode of living. He has invented a regular system of hygiene for himself, one of his theories being that you should never take hot food or drink. Winter and summer he wears the same costume—no under clothing and no extra outer clothing. He generally has a cap on his head, which he also wears in preference to a hat out of doors. Whitehall Review.

Contents of The Weekly Gazette.

The first page is devoted to miscellaney, opening with some pretty verses entitled "My Cigar," which are followed by an article on "Scholarship among Statesmen." There is an intesting description of Castilar and an account of Arthur P. Gorman's progress from page to senator. A column of Paris wit concludes this page.

Among the editorials will be found a discussion of "Our Public School System," and some remarks on the question "To Whom the Credit is Due." There are also a large number of editorial notes upon the questions of the day, both at home and abroad.

In the local department will be found an interesting article on "Gas and the Trees," the third of a series of character sketches entitled "My Rocky Mountain Tramp and What Become of Him." There is an account of the accident by which J. J. Lyon was instantly killed and the report of the coroner's jury. The mining news from all parts of the state is especially full and there are letters from the regular correspondents of the GAZETTE at Silverton, Monument and Bijou Basin. The real estate transfers to date will be found, and in addition a large number of articles on local topics, which will be found of interest. The list is too extended to give in full.

Messrs. Clement & Russell have got their marble works in good running order, and are now busy in filling orders for headstones. They have in their employ a first-class carver in marble, and expect in a short time to be able to compete with any firm in the west. Their works, which are located on Nevada Avenue, between Pike's Peak and Huerfano, are worthy of a visit.

MONUMENT MATTERS.

What is Doing in the Divide Region.

From the regular correspondent of the GAZETTE.

MONUMENT, Jan. 30. This has been a stormy week. Some six inches of snow have fallen and high winds have prevailed. At eight o'clock this morning the mercury stood at 10° below zero. Snow drifts have impeded somewhat the movement of trains but not seriously, as the huge thirty ton engines that now run on the narrow guage are not to be stopped by any ordinary snow bank.

Considerable sickness still prevails but the recent cold weather is having a beneficial effect in checking the progress of disease. Mr. McShane's sick child, mentioned in my last letter, died the next day of that dread disease, diphtheria. Two of R. J. Gwillim's children are sick also with the diphtheria. Mrs. W. B. Walker, wife of one of our merchants, is very low with pneumonia and not expected to live.

Dr. T. B. Moore of Belleville, Ill., has taken up his abode among us. The doctor is highly spoken of by those who have known him in the states as a gentleman and a good physician.

R. W. Stewart, of Denver, and proprietor of Stewart's mill, the largest on the Divide, was here last week to arrange for the shipment of his lumber at this station. Most of the saw timber left on the Divide is in El Paso county, and Monument is likely to be the principal shipping point hereafter.

The railroad company is making arrangements to put up a large quantity of ice at Lake Albert. This little lake furnishes ice of the very best quality.

Mr. C. A. Weiss, for six years operator at Divide station, and one of the most faithful employes of the D. & R. G. road, leaves to-morrow for California with his family. When the D. & R. G. took the road last summer on the strength of Judge Bowen's injunction, Mr. Weiss received the first train order from General Manager D. C. Dodge. The Santa Fe dispatcher "broke in" on him when he commenced to receive it, and ordered him not to take it. The question was ticked out over the wires "Whose authority will you respect?" There was a moments pause and then, faithful to his old officers, Weiss responded, "I will obey General Palmer" and took the train order. For this act he was discharged as soon as the Santa Fe got possession of the road again, but was reinstated by Receiver Ellsworth some time ago.

Is It a Glacier?

The Leadville Herald thus describes the alleged discovery of an alleged glacier near that city. A gentleman who has during the past two years traversed the mountains in the vicinity of Leadville, and penetrated almost every one of the secret recesses, informed a Herald reporter yesterday that there is within twenty-five miles of this city one of the most interesting curiosities of nature, a veritable glacier, presenting all the characteristics of the glaciers of Switzerland, both in magnitude and motion, its progress being gradually down the gulch. The scene of the curiosity is located in the Mosquito range, about fifteen miles north of the pass. Our informant states that he first discovered it about three years ago, while out on a prospecting tour. It was then nearly a mile in length, and at the bottom of the gulch presented a sheer precipice of ice not less than one hundred and fifty feet in height. Later in the season the place was visited again, when it was found that the great mass of ice had melted until at its face it was not more than one hundred feet high, the loss from the surface reducing its length to about half a mile. Again, early the following year, the place was visited, and the glacier was found to have regained its bulk, showing that the accumulation of ice and snow during the winter was about one-third of its gross bulk. The rocks on the sides of this immense mass of ice show the marks of attrition, proving beyond all controversy that the glacier is in motion. Indeed, the earth at the foot of the glacier, heaved up in great masses, shows that it is gradually moving down into the valley. During the summer a large stream of water flows from the face of the icy cliff. Our informant is of the opinion that the glacier, as it progressed out of the deep gorge in which it was first formed, will melt away, and that it will not last many years. It is out of the way of ordinary travel, and the route to the scene is exceedingly difficult, so that it is not likely to be visited except by prospectors and hunters."

Brightest and Best of Balls.

The ball given last evening in Court House Hall by the Matt France Hose Co. No. 1, was a great success. The company is a deservedly popular one with our citizens and any entertainment under its auspices was sure to be liberally patronized. The ladies and gentlemen who were present at the hop last evening were unanimous in their expressions of praise. The management of the ball had been placed in excellent hands and every particular of comfort and enjoyment was therefore carefully looked after. The music was all that could be desired and on the whole there has not been a pleasanter party given this season than the ball last night of Hose No. 1.

THE SCHOOL OF MINES.

How It Has Prospered and What It Hopes.

The board of directors of the School of Mines met in Golden last Wednesday. Messrs. Stinghauer, Johnson and Smith, of Denver, and Messrs. Everett and King, of Golden, were present throughout. The main business on hand was the approval of building contracts, the auditing of current bills, and to ascertain the present standing of the school. The latter item was reached by a formal report from the professor in charge, Dr. Milton Moss, from which the following is taken:

To the Honorable Board of Trustees of the State School of Mines:

GENTLEMEN: I herewith submit to you a report on the progress of the School of Mines since the commencement of the scholastic year, beginning September, 1879, its prospects, and various other matters connected with it, taking the liberty to involve in the same some views and suggestions, which I hope may meet with your favorable consideration, as they appear to me pertinent to the welfare of the institution.

It was anticipated that the return to the School of Mines building, last fall, would have the effect of preventing the attendance of students, on account of the inconvenience of getting there. But you must be agreeably surprised and highly gratified in looking over the roll to find that the institution has never before shown so many pursuing a thorough course, and I may add, such promising young men, as during the past and present terms, although, judging from the frequent personal and written applications, the number would have been greatly increased had we been better situated as to building.

FIRST TERM 1879-80.

C H Hand	Dakota
E B Krausse	Missouri
Robt A Fry	Missouri
George Kelley	Colorado
George Townsend	Colorado
B Everett	Massachusetts
Ernest Jacob	England
John Causley	England
J J Snyder	Kentucky
T L Barnes	Illinois
C O Shields	Colorado
Harry Tarbell	Colorado
William G Eads	Colorado
F C Miller	Colorado

SECOND TERM—1879-80.

Clayton K Smith	Pennsylvania
R H McFadden	Pennsylvania
Robt J Hilton	New York
R M Richardson, jr	New York
Harold Faye	New York
C H Hand	Dakota
E B Krausse	Missouri
John Causley	England
C O Shields	Colorado
C T Gooding	Colorado
F C Miller	Colorado
George Kelley	Colorado
George Townsend	Colorado

From this it may be seen that during the severest season of the year much work is being done and the utility of our school becoming more widely known. From what has been told me, we may expect five or six more on the list before the term closes.

The studies pursued by the students and the recitations for the forenoons of each week comprise chemistry, geology, mineralogy, metallurgy, and assaying.

The afternoon of each school day is devoted to laboratory work and assaying. Some of the students are engaged in the laboratory, and at the furnace also in the forenoon.

The first, and one of the most important points, to which I should like to draw the attention of the board, is the desirability of having some one to aid me, not merely in my school duties, but more particularly a person who has the ability and is willing in every way to assist in bringing our institution to the notice of the people this year. The class of young gentlemen now with us demand greater advantages and a more liberal fulfilment of our circular promises than we have been able to afford them heretofore. It is essential that we should gradually increase the faculty and thereby give the institution more dignity and value, not only in the eyes of the people, but in reality.

You will perceive from the accompanying statement of studies that a single individual can hardly do justice in meeting the requirements of every student, under the prevailing circumstances. Too little time remains for preparation, and I should also have more leisure to devote to those in the laboratory.

I desire in this connection to suggest the name of Rev. Arthur Lakes, a gentleman of scholarly attainments graduate of Oxford, England and one who has always done his utmost to further the welfare of our institution, as a very desirable acquisition. His excursions and lectures during his stay in Golden last year, advertised us well and properly. His articles were always gladly received by the Denver papers, from which they were copied by some of the best journals in the east. His experience in the Rockies, his work at the Peabody museum at Yale College, and the reputation his exhumings in this state have given him, would make him a great help, more especially now, since he has for almost a year been gathering much valuable material in his explorations through Wyoming, under the direction of Prof. O. C. Marsh of Yale. A good geological lecture is always attractive, and Prof. Lakes has the gift, too, of making them popularly comprehensive and enjoyable.

The value of a good mining and metallurgical education is unquestionably becoming more and more indispensable to those connected with the raising and working of ores in Colorado, or rather throughout the west.

Permit me at the close to express my sanguine expectations that, with the occupation of the building in town, a new era of prosperity will dawn for the school, which will entitle it to the recognition as being one of the most useful and flourishing institutions in the west.

In addition to the points contained in the professor's address we add the following from the Denver News: Nine thousand dollars is the estimated cost of the new school building.

The School of Mines students are a prominent and welcome factor in Golden society.

The building committee is made up of Dr. Steinhauer of Denver, and Messrs. Everett and King of Golden, all careful and experienced business men.

Receipts turned in by the secretary yesterday, for tuition and assays during the present term, were $256.50. Bill allowed for salaries and current expenses, $290.

The brick contract on the proposed new building, now under way, calls for $3,232, and the stone contract for $1,500. Both have fallen to excellent parties, who have given ample bonds for good work.

A professor of civil engineering will be added to the regular faculty as soon as the funds will permit. Professor Berthoud, chief engineer of the Colorado Central, has charge of the students now in that branch. But the demand is getting to be too great for his time.

Rev. Arther Lakes, the well-known geologist, has been invited to occupy a place in the faculty until the end of the present school year. Colorado is entitled to a portion of the time of this home developed savant, whose researches are highly appreciated in the learned circles of the east.

The New York Clipper has given the Alpine hose team of Georgetown a record for the fastest time for the distance run.

The Philharmonic society of Georgetown will make its first appearance in a concert given in aid of the distressed people of Ireland.

The Trinidad Enterprise says that cattle thieves have been plenty in that vicinity lately, but the officers have just found it out, by the help of the cattle men of the county.

The Denver Times makes the following contribution to the dog boom which is now sweeping over the country: "A few nights ago, a gentleman heard a commotion in his barn and hastily dressing himself, went out to see the occasion of the disturbance, taking a well-loaded revolver with him. Cautiously approaching the door, which was slightly ajar, a lop-eared dog rushed out past him, followed by seven others of assorted breeds. He banged away with his gun, and wasted six cartridges without hitting a dog, but badly frightened the entire neighborhood."

Harry Yount returned to Cheyenne one day last week from a hunting tour near the Laramie Peak of two or three weeks' duration, and among other evidences of his successful trip he brought back the skin of a large "silver-tipped" grizzly bear. The animal was one of the largest of its species, and a dangerous antagonist had the ball from a trusty rifle missed its mark. In relating the incident of the killing to the Cheyenne Leader, Harry said that he went within a few yards of the beast, which laid in a crouching position, before discovering it, and he knew full well his mortal danger should his shot fall short of its intended mission; but he had the utmost confidence in his rifle, and blazed away, killing the animal instantly.

The status of a discovery made within the boundaries of a valid location, is thus defined by Judge Bowen, in a Leadville case: A vein, ledge, lode or deposit of mineral-bearing rock in place being once discovered, and such having afterwards been followed up by a valid location and record of a lode claim based upon such discovery, the land, earth, or mineral within the limits of such location ceases to be unappropriated public domain of the United States, and thereafter no valid location of a mining claim can be made thereon, based upon a discovery of mineral bearing rock in place lying within the lines of the claim so first located, save any except by the owner of the claim so first located, and a location so made by such owner would be an act of abandonment of at least so much of the first location as might be included in the lines of the second, and should such location include the discovery shaft of the first then such location would be an act of abandonment of the whole of the first location.
